Q: How do I check if my browser's rendering engine is in fixed-pitch or variable-pitch mode? I'm using the latest iTerm-based Terminal on OS X Yosemite. My question is, how do I check if my browser is using the fixed pitch font? For example, Chrome's rendering engine is using dynamic fonts like this: But my browser font is fixed-pitch like this: So how do I know if my browser is using the fixed pitch font or the dynamic font? A: As a follow-up to the answer by @escapingdragon, for chrome you can right click on the page -> View page info, then in the bottom of the window which will open up click on the button on the right called "Advanced options" and select "Text size". The default setting is "Use fixed size". Q: Find the eigenvalues of this matrix I came across this question in my textbook. Can anyone tell me how to solve this one?
$$\begin{bmatrix} 3 & 0 & 2 \\ 0 & 1 & 0 \\ 0 & 2 & 3 \end{bmatrix}$$
 I'm interested in finding the eigenvalues and eigenvectors. A: You have a scalar equation $3x_1 + 2x_2 + x_3 = 0$ which is $x_3 = -2x_1 - x_2$. Now $\begin{bmatrix} x_1 \\ x_2 \end{bmatrix}$ is a vector and x_3 is the eigenvalue 1 . The present invention relates to an electrical connector assembly, and more particularly to a high speed electrical connector assembly. An electrical connector assembly for connecting two electronic devices usually includes two housings as disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 8,863,170 and U.S. Pat. No. 6,336,929. In the prior art design, the two housings are stacked on each other and then a mold for the connector is mounted on top of the housings. In this kind of design, a molding process is required to enable the mold to be mounted on the top of the housings. Accordingly, the housings need to have extra lengths so that the extra lengths of the housing can be molded

Businesses use computer-related equipment (such as servers, routers, computers, and switches) in a wide range of industries, including manufacturing, retail, communication, banking, finance, distribution, transportation, healthcare, high tech, and insurance. Businesses rely on the secure and reliable operation of these computer-related equipment for the smooth flow of business. Therefore, any threat to the reliability of computer-related equipment may decrease the overall performance and efficiency of a business. Vulnerabilities in computer-related equipment, including computer-based servers, can take many forms. As one example, a vendor of computer-related equipment may use a programming defect in the computer-related equipment to subvert the computer-related equipment into a platform for an attack on a business. In another example, a malicious user of computer-related equipment may attack a business by surreptitiously causing a disruption in the computer-related equipment, including a disruption to the quality of service. As a result of the disruption, the overall performance and efficiency of the business may be compromised. For example, malicious users may surreptitiously cause a denial-of-service (DoS) attack to disrupt a business. Existing security software and other security measures are not always sufficient for detecting vulnerabilities in the computer-related equipment. Therefore, a need exists for a mechanism that is suitable for detecting vulnerabilities in computer-related equipment, and, in particular, that is suitable for detecting vulnerabilities in computer-related equipment that may compromise the performance and efficiency of a business. The present invention relates to a system for delivering medical content from one location to another, and in particular to a system for delivering a medical treatment to a patient. In order to deliver a medical treatment to a patient, for example treatment of cardiac arrhythmias, it is necessary to deliver an electrical stimulus to a specific point of the patient's body. By applying electrical impulses to the patient, an effect can be obtained, which can lead to a change in the patient's condition, e.g. the stimulation of cardiac tissue and/or intravascular tissue. In order to deliver the electrical impulses to the appropriate place, it is necessary to be able to pinpoint the specific location from which the electrical impulses are to be transmitted. Thus, it is necessary to be able to identify the specific part or location of the patient's body to which the electrical impulses are to be delivered. In the past, many different techniques

have been used to determine the specific point
